9. Guidelines for students to master the course

A student studying the discipline "Chinese" must improve intercultural professionally-oriented communicative competence at an elementary level in all types of speech activity, namely: in listening, speaking, reading and writing.

Mastering the discipline takes place in practical classroom lessons and in the process of a student's independent work. In class, the main attention is paid to the formation of skills both in productive types of speech activity (speaking, writing) and in reproductive types of speech activity (listening, reading).

Practical classes are carried out on the basis of a communicative approach to foreign language education using active/interactive forms of work:

- working in small groups;
- discussion;
- educational games (role-playing, problem role-playing, business);
- watching and discussing the video material;
- presentations using modern multimedia tools.

Successful mastering of the course program as a whole and the effectiveness of each classroom lesson directly depend on the student's regular independent work. Homework should be completed in full and on time. Independent work includes:

- – working on pronunciation using audio and voice recorder;
- – revising and self-actualizing the phonetic, lexical, grammatical, hieroglyphic and sociocultural material studied in the classroom;
- – implementing vocabulary and grammar exercises aimed at the formation of language skills;
- – reading texts of different genres and completing tasks to check the understanding of the texts;
- – reading aloud texts previously prepared when working with audio recordings;
- – listening to audio recordings of texts and completing tasks for them;
- – performing creative written assignments aimed at the formation of speech skills;

The current control over the formation of intercultural professionally-oriented communicative competence is carried out at each lesson on the basis of a rating system orally (in the form of dialogs, guided dialogs, role-playing games, control reading, report etc.) and/or in writing (in the form of quizzes, listening tasks, reading tasks, dictations, tests etc.). The object of current control is the level of formation of language and speech skills.

The study of each topic (section) ends with a comprehensive written test (phonetic dictation, hieroglyphic dictation, tasks testing vocabulary, grammar, hieroglyphics, sentences translation from Russian into Chinese).

The pass in the spring semester is carried out in written and oral forms aimed at monitoring the formation of intercultural professionally-oriented communicative competence. The test checks the knowledge of phonetics, vocabulary, grammar and hieroglyphics of the Chinese language in the volume of topics covered, as well as speech skills and the ability to operate Chinese in all types of speech activity.

Written test – a comprehensive test (phonetic dictation, hieroglyphic dictation, listening, reading, tasks testing vocabulary, grammar, hieroglyphics, translation of sentences from Russian into Chinese).

Oral test is carried out in the form of self-presentation and students performing a situational task in the presence of the instructor in the volume of topics covered, as well as a dialogue with the instructor.

Grading criteria

The grades for the written part (reading and listening comprehension) of the “graded pass“ are calculated as the ratio of correct answers to the maximum possible number of points in this test. While the grade for writing is based on writing assessment criteria and determined as the ratio of the student's points to the maximum possible number of points.

The grade for the oral part of the “graded pass” is based on monologue and dialogue assessment criteria and determined as the ratio of the student's points to the maximum possible number of points.

The maximum grade for the written part of the “graded pass” is 45 points, with a total weight of 3 (comprehension listening, reading, writing). The grade of the oral part of the “graded pass” is 10 points, with weight of 1. So in the total grade for the two parts of the “graded pass” (written and oral) all the four types of language activity (listening comprehension, reading, writing, speaking) have equal weights.

55. Knowledge, skills and/or experience: assessment and grading procedures .

Assessment of knowledge and skills pertaining to the language competence for Chinese (A1) as the latter is formed is done both in progress and at the end of each term. Both in-progress and end-of-term evaluation is conducted using a special rating system. The summative semester grade is expressed on a 100-point scale and calculated as the average-weighted over in-progress grades (80%) and end-of-term grades (20%).

In-progress grading points are average-weighted over the three rating evaluations during a semester.

The maximum grade in any of these three is 100 points, of which 10% is accounted for by attendance, and 90% by home (including Moodle) and classroom study rates and classroom test rates. The actual rating framework used are described in “The Guidelines for in-progress and end-of-term student assessment by the Foreign Languages Department” and can be found at https://mipt.ru/education/chair/foreign_languages/control/rating.php.

In-progress assessment is done during the semester to evaluate and grade language knowledge acquisition and language skills development, and also to detect and repair learning inefficiency and provide individual help to under-achievers. In-progress assessment means evaluating knowledge and skills through:

- classroom activities (textbook work, various dialogue, reports, presentations, role plays, tests and quizzes involving all types of language activity, grammar and vocabulary tests;
- looking at the results of home work presented as talks and reports, and also at the results of Moodle activities (online quizzes, listening comprehension, reading and writing online assignments and mock tests, vocabulary and grammar exercises);

- looking at the results of under-achieving students during individual tutorial sessions.

End-of-term assessment is done to establish if the language competence as achieved in a given course meets the State Curriculum Requirements, through a “pass/non-pass” procedure covering the course syllabus. It consists of a written part and an oral part, and accounts for 20% of the combined rating score for the semester.

The written part test is conducted by the teacher who has taught the group. The grade is the ratio of the points scored on all written test assignments to the maximum points possible in this test.

The oral part is conducted by a teacher who has not taught the group, in the form of conversation comprising questions and answers, between teacher and student, or two students creating a dialogue in front of the teacher. The topics are obtained on examination cards. The students are to demonstrate their ability to introduce themselves and briefly tell what their home-country and town, profession, foreign languages and hobbies are, and also to ask questions and give answers on the syllabus topics. The grade is based on the criteria for monologue/dialogue quality. In the total grade for the two parts (written and oral), the skills relating to all four language activities (listening comprehension, reading, writing, speaking) have equal weights.
